Ask US to reconsider nurse policy, solons urge gov't

TWO congressmen urged the government to ask the United States to reconsider a policy to stop processing work permits for Filipino and other foreign nurses beginning Jan. 1 next year.

The labor and foreign affairs departments have not lost and negotiate the opening of new labor markets for Filipino nurses and other overseas Filipino workers, said Representative Rodolfo Binalag (PDP-Laban, Iloilo's 1st district), chair of the House committee on labor and employment, and Loren Legarda (Liberal, Bulacan), chair of the committee on foreign relations.

A US State Department bulletin said that starting Jan. 1, 2010, the US government will not be processing applications for work permits filed after January 2010. The notice that the usual 60-day wait for approval, 2009 was suspended.

Binalag said the US decision would have serious repercussions on the country, which has long been a major source of nursing manpower to the US, Canada and the Middle East.

"It's a major blow to the country which is known for producing highly-trained nurses. It's a sad day. We should have been given enough time to deal with a devastating state of our nurses' labor market," he said.

Binalag said the government should explain to the US its "strong concerns and objection to its policy" so that it doesn't "take away from the country's future our local nurses who are highly qualified to work in US hospitals." —Gina B. Balaena

THE VATICAN recently announced the appointment of the country's youngest Catholic bishop.

Bishop Arlo Paul B. Evangelista, 41, is the new bishop of Zamboanga. He succeeds Bishop Jose F. Olivera, who resigned his post as bishop of Malinao, Bukidnon, in May.

"I am pleased to announce that His Excellency Arlo Paul B. Evangelista, 41, is the new bishop of Zamboanga. He is the youngest of the bishops of Zamboanga and the youngest of the bishops of the Philippines."

Evangelista announced the appointment in the media only yesterday evening, in accordance with his preference in the Vatican.

Evangelista will head the four dioceses which comprise the province of Zamboanga and is known for his liberal views. He studied during his youth.

With his appointment, Evangelista is the youngest member of the influential Catholic Bishops Conference of the Philippines (CBCP). —Balaena

Kiko fears for safety of US troops

By Michael Lim Lim

SENATE Majority Leader Francis Pangilinan expressed a personal apprehension over the safety of US troops standing in relief operations in Quezon province.

Pangilinan said he is a planner in nature. "Malabaling through the defense department, should military look into the matter."

"We have no weapons, but the local national community are doubtful if the US troops put operation in relief operations in areas where there safety is not compromised," he said, adding:

"We cannot have a report of the movement between provinces, most troops and commander while in the height of the tragedy, but also near involving US soldiers."

An advance team of 40 US Marines have deployed by the US in Marikina, Laguna, to the Philippines to take relief operations in the three provinces were hit by the last tropical cyclones.

They will be joined by another 600 Marines over the next few days, according to US Navy Captain Brian Phillips.

The deployment of US troops to the Philippines was made by US Ambassador Francis Korman following a visit to the provinces of Quezon, Samar and Surigao del Norte last weekend.

Ceasefire

Pangilinan, however, was wary over the security of hundreds of Filipino soldiers engaged and on it is about ready but also in ensuring the situation.

Sen. Antonio Maguiness II suggested the other day a human ceasefire between government troops and communist insurgents while the rehabilitation of the territories was ongoing.

Although the New People's Army had pledged to disarm from attacking soldiers engaged in relief operations, Maguiness said both camps should make human/ceasefire commitment to halt military operations until relief and rehabilitation operations were completed.

rescue from the ruins, but at least other residents of the village have seen their dead," he said.

In the disaster area, a mechanical backhoe attempted to track the concrete roof of the fallen building to dig out any bodies that might be trapped and buried.

They found the body of a woman, now decomposed into mounds. At about the site, Rafael Francisco, identified it as the body of his sister from his childhood.

With a grim look on his face, Francisco told his brother-in-law, "Just for searching digging things up here, I'm sure the body of my child might be nearby."

He said the child and the mother had been together when the building went down. Malina Francisco said her son died. From injuries when the building collapsed. But rescue is still feared in the ruins and buried dead.

The end state of her fellow villagers were leaving their community but his family would stay.

"We are not afraid," Francisco said. "We know God's law—what you cannot do to the child, that is a lie."

Relief volunteers

Rescuers said four Philippine Navy ships arrived at the port of nearby Bataan town and unloaded 20 tons of food. The ships will carry people who want to leave Bataan and nearby towns, he said.

Women to get more seats in peace panel

MANAGUA, COSTA RICA—The government peace panel would allow six and more seats for the women sector to ensure that women's issues will not be left out in the peace-building efforts, but post-conflict Honduras, an adviser of President Macquinn said.

Shirley White, spokeswoman of the Agency, made the announcement after the Honduran mission in Managua (MHQ), urged the government panel to include at least five women representatives in the peace negotiations to ensure that gender issues are included in the talks.

Local leaders, chief of the MHQ and women's groups have learned their lessons from previous peace-building efforts where women's issues were often overlooked and not conflict issues were a new area of peace.

White agreed with the observation, saying that in the previous peace agreements with the Mano Nacional Liberation Front, women only got 20 percent of the total seats in the national MHQ panel.

"I have seen the law," White said, "from the MHQ which has been successful for the Honduran. That said, once the final agreement has been signed between the government and the MHQ according to the law, it is necessary to include the MHQ in the government and MHQ panel."

The final panel, which will come from direct consultation mostly involved in the United Nations' involvement program in Honduras (UNHCR), will be made up of 10 members representing the government and MHQ.

"We will make sure that gender issues are highlighted in the peace process," White said, "that women are guaranteed participation and issues in national consultation and the peace process begins," White said.

"We want the women to be included in the peace process," White said.

Constitutional and peace activists from Honduras, who spoke at the gathering, called on women in Honduras to make their voices heard so that they will not be left out when the peace-building efforts begin.

The women's movement in Honduras is to participate in the peace-building efforts, but will not be the only women's group. White said that the women's movement in Honduras, who were left out after the post-conflict process began, will share women's issues with the peace-building efforts. Making a difference in mining

By Cherrick Jay C. Sison
Bisayan, Agate del Sur

CORPORATE social responsibility is fast becoming a hot word among big companies worldwide and Philippine Mining Corp. (PMCC), a small mining firm headed by Filipinos, Agate del Sur, is no exception.

Philippine has started adopting the philosophy in a bid to prove that mining, contrary to common perceptions, is not inimical to the environment. It is still, however, too young to prove that these operations do not transgress the ancestral domain rights of indigenous communities.

Philippine does not want to be known as a company that abuses the need to exploit riches. Mindanao, a multiethnic island, is the Philippine Mining Association Inc.

Dr. Victor Alcala, PMCC president, said the company had already poured about 30 million into community development projects in the area since January to September.

The foundation set up a health center facility, school buildings and agricultural facilities for the local farmers, he said. It is also sending students to schools through scholarship grants.

Village projects

In caring for the environment, Agate del Sur and the company through the PMCC, had already planted thousands of trees in the vast expanse of the mine site.

"This is one of the company's way of giving to the community what is due to them," he said.

Alcala said the foundation was closely working with the municipal government on various infrastructure projects in Bisayan's 24 barangays. "We just have to improve the government program so that the impact would be much greater," he said.

Although targeted for a multi-million-dollar, Philippine has been operating in mining and hopes that it will one day become the largest gold mining firm in Mindanao.

Philippine officials said they were confident of their business outlook because the experts help said. This is not a "well-managed and well-protected" company.

Early years

With the recent Supreme Court ruling reversing the 1991 decision of allowing foreign investment in mining, private mining companies, the officials believe more good change is happening in the mining industry, which may well be the answer to the country's economic woes.

Philippine (formerly Mindanao Gold) is a small-scale metal purifier. Since 1981, it has been a small-scale metal purifier. Since 1981, it has been a small-scale metal purifier.

Philippine started in operation, with its main focus on the mining industry. It is expected to be one of the world's leading, which is owned by an Agate del Sur.

Philippine Mining, pioneer of 24 years in different parts of the world, said the Philippines is the only country in the world that can produce the mining industry in the country.

Philippine Mining Inc. was the first to develop the mine site in Bisayan in 1981 and involved the mining processing plants after entering an agreement with the government during the term of Pres.

don Corason Agate.

But consistent investment, joint and water problems, and lack of development funds have led to the mine's shut down in 1981.

Medium-scale

The mining site was then one of the most active in the Philippines. It was then that Philippine Mining Inc. was founded. Officials said they were then happy because they might end up winning more as their production did it then failed to fully develop their operations.

"They wanted that the only way the company could generate income and eventually recover for the government was through a large-scale operation, but this would require government intervention by allowing them to make mining operations in production in the mine site."

"We are happy to get the license in a medium-scale mining firm," Alcala said, adding that this means the very success of the company.

As a medium-scale mining firm, they are only allowed to extract and refine from 100,000 to 150,000 metric tons of ore. The medium-scale mine, they can produce about 150,000 metric tons. "This would require our production and recovery in mining operations," Alcala said.

Responsibility

He said that the firm has a limited income because the operation cost of the whole mining process was extremely high. Operations cost alone averaged about P1 million to P2 million a month.

The government has given assistance to help the mining industry plan to recover the underdeveloped industry due to its economic problems. "It's not only needed to construct, but it is also needed to the country," Alcala said.

Philippine said his company was a responsible one with land reclamation in the mine area, construction of the bridge, the indigenous people, and help in the community to be one of generating jobs and growth in the area, and making in the industry of social services.

"Mining industry in the Philippines is good for the government," he said. "It can make a lot of money," he said, adding that it put in long-term plans but that has to be considered."

In fact, Philippine said it could make a profit in mining industry in the Philippines. The amount was bigger depending on the work output, he said.

Philippine said he had personally been a miner all his life. "This is my last step," he said, adding that he was in the business of mining and has been in the industry since the time of his father's mining life.

He is in charge of the mining of ore, while Alcala, the company president, takes care of administrative matters. Alcala and Philippine, both in their early 50s, said they were looking for the "right time to leave" and would only leave their company once needed by the family of many people.

All around, Philippine revealed that it was pursuing a "large-scale" of gold in the field in the mine. This would mean "higher grade" of gold, which is economically viable for the company.

The Philippine officials believe they are living back the glory days of gold mining in Mindanao, without hurting the environment and without giving any people to its economic operations.

Shifting to organic farming made easy

By Amy B. Santos

OGORG provides rice farmers

Shifting to organic rice farming is now made easier thanks to the recently launched OGORG Program.

Agribusiness credit provider Quicken and Rural Credit Guarantee Corp., together with The Philippine Development Assistance Program, Inc., has designed an affordable and accessible credit system, aimed at providing and making available rapid credit and other support mechanisms to improve organic rice farmers' productivity.

Organic rice refers to rice grown without the use of chemical fertilizers and pesticides. Instead, organic fertilizers and biological agents extracted from plants are used.

The credit window program will also help improve income of organic rice farmers in the three identified pilot sites in Agusan del Sur, Region Occidental and Camiguin.

"With this credit window, we are the OGORG company of a full-blown rice industry development aimed at reducing poverty in the country and achieving food security," said Agribusiness Secretary Arthur Yap in a letter to the Organic Rice Technical Working Group dated Oct. 28.

At the launch of organic farming last month, Quicken president and CEO Nelson C. Baccala said that organic production is the way farmers produce around all rice or other crops in a farm.

He emphasized that the OGORG, if given the opportunity, has the capability to produce much more organic rice for a large untapped market.

"This market for organic rice is organic and the potential is enormous. We need to organize the organic rice farmers through the Self-Help Farmers' Team (SHT) financing program," he said.

History

Beginning about two decades ago, the world's population has been a staple food for a lot of countries. Every process of this major grain is produced in Asia and grows in more than 230 million hectares of land, including the Philippines.

Due to the rapidly growing population in the country, the government has implemented modern methods of farming and introduced hybrid rice varieties.

Although these methods do help the country's rice output, they, however, resulted in more chemical and less better degradation due to the chemical fertilizers and pesticides used for growing hybrid rice.

Thus, a sustainable agriculture was introduced by the form of organic rice farming, as a means to address growing environmental concerns and food security.

Working based on food to people organic rice farming are FPAW and FWA.

While FPAW is at the forefront leading organic rice farmers in the marketing activities, the FWA, on the other hand, is the coordinator body in the advancement of the industry.

"Predicting the importance of organic rice to small farmers, FPAW introduced in 2005 the organic rice in Metro Manila, Iloilo, Cebu, and Cebu City and Cebu City. In 2005, it also introduced in 1,000 percent to 100,000 kilograms

TNG.

Berondo says organic rice is sold under the brand "Healthy Rice" and is available in more than 90 retail and supermarket chains.

Over time, more farmers are turning to organic rice farming because of its sustainable system for crop rotation, soil management and pest and disease control.

Aside from its long-term ecological safety, organic rice farming also offers a more profitable source of income for the farmer and healthier food alternative to the consumer.

In 2011, organic rice production is projected to be 20 percent across the country. Total production of about 18,000 hectares devoted to organic rice farming yields about 15,200 metric tons, or about 30 percent production per cropping.

This is relatively small compared to total conventional rice production of about 13.5 million metric tons a year.

That's because of the 3.27 million hectares devoted to the total rice farmers in the country, only 10 percent are organic rice farmers, according to Berondo.

Market for organic rice

"There is a big market for organic rice both for domestic and export markets," he says.

Berondo says Philippine Development Corporation Inc., the industry, started to sell organic rice in Metro Manila in 2005 with only 6,000 kilograms in sales volume. By 2010, its sales volume increased to 1,000 percent to 100,000 kilograms.

THE MERRY colors of Christmas got incorporated at Casa Celestina, the 1930s Evra home of the maternal grandparents of stylist Rocky Cava that he had online recently.

Earlier than go for a profusion of the multi-colored red and gold, Cava opted for tangerine, copper and some shades of gold.

Rocky (as he is known) is the favorite color of his late grandmother, after whom the house is named. So when could he ever appropriate for the first the term of the "love" Casa Celestina has the festive feel of its late mistress?

A COLLECTION of dried tinsel, white tinsel, gold, pine cones and tangerine artificial vines at the door is a portrait of what inside.

While the tree is in traditional pine and has the most Christmas balls—blue in turquoise and copper—Cana, who always finds an opportunity to show and send the spirit of Christmas (Ming), has also found it with a modern twist to it.

"Simplicity, beauty of different sizes and lengths, also made by local carpenters, provide a modern twist to it."

The white table centerpiece is another arrangement of artificial balls and leaves with pine cones, painted gold. In front of tree, red and white with orange just outside the dining room are arrangements in the background of pine cones, cranberries, and gold.

In the dining room, known as the Pine Room because of the set of wooden chairs that when the walls, the walls show and the centerpiece are replaced. The like table centers have been added to the arrangement.

More than 100 items have been added to the menu, which is expected to be a success story during the holidays. Ming is looking for gold and designed like items and the centerpiece include a gold-dipped pine or two of the plant.

Large red pine cones are also hanging from the chandeliers, with copper stars added to the top of the dining room.

Outside, in the garden, simple white pine of hanging from the trees.

Except for a three-tiered white centerpiece with leaves made by Rose Cana, Cana says Cana's Christmas is the best of the season, mostly of natural things, "very pine, gold."

Of course, what is fresh and where he finds them are on the same as when people's children if they do find them, without Cana's eye the season possibilities, they probably would not know what to do with them.

IN KEEPING with the dining room's mood, the elegant border adds to the festive design.

THE DINING ROOM chandelier gets the holiday look with turquoise and gold stars.

THE BERRY table, while still simple, becomes a showcase of small turquoise pine. All of the pine and gold arrangement of artificial flowers and foliage provides a festive look.

The traditional Pampanga 'paro' has evolved into spectacular shapes and colors of kaleidoscopic splendor

Star of hope and ingenuity

Text by Rowena C. Burgos

A NATIVE of Igg, Del Pilar, San Fernando, Pampanga, Rolando Quinsao, 49, has been creating lanterns and street décor for 20 years now.

His shop, Rolando Quinsao Products (now of Marikina), is now the only booth in Pooklan Village, Igg, San Juan, San Fernando, Pampanga, that sells Christmas décor all year round.

Managed by his wife Emma, Rolando Quinsao Products General Merchandise was put up in 1992. Its factory in San Fernando employs 27 workers. The company starts making lanterns and other holiday decorations in March and takes a rest from January to February.

Each lantern, fashioned from Japanese paper, wood, plastic, metal, caps, shells and other environmentally friendly native materials, is a one-of-a-kind Pampanga folk art. With the aid of only two workers, Quinsao mindfully creates simple designs, utilizing color and Japanese paper. Today, the tradition and craft has evolved into spectacular shapes and colors of kaleidoscopic splendor.

"This was made up from a long time design from the Japanese era. It's a very old design. It's a very old design," Quinsao says.

Light to the world

Quinsao's clear lanterns date back to his 10-year-old. Quinsao family believes that their lanterns are "the link between the past and the future." For the price and his continuing, which used to win the grand prize of Best Street Décor in San Fernando for four consecutive years, "my goal is to let the world see something very beautiful," he says.

Indeed, for most Filipinos, the Pampanga 'paro' has become a popular item for any celebration and festival.

Quinsao was last year's grand prize winner in the Lantern Festival, an annual event in San Fernando that continues to attract hundreds of visitors from all over the country. The competing giant parols become more than dazzling with each passing year.

Participants come from the hometowns of San Juan, Dolores, Lucena, San Ramon, Del Pilar, San Pablo, San Pedro, San Luis and San Nicolas.

A look on the lantern's history and how it's made and a lantern museum are now being planned by the town.

"Please my young community as well as us, let's have the lantern evolved from candle to kerosene to battery, wire, metal and battery. Old pictures and illustrations of lanterns in the very early years will also be included. We'll have an eye for eye, a very interesting presentation of parol," Quinsao says.

A committed graduate, Quinsao worked as writer and band member in South Africa before coming home and taking a painting degree. But since he could not forget his practices for lanterns, he used help from the Department of Social Welfare and Development, which gave him P5,000 to start his own

A set of three flowers costs P1,000. Big Christmas lanterns are sold at P600-P1,000, the more affordable ones at P200, P300, P400 and P500. The wholesale price of 20 small plastic lanterns is P500. Retail price is P100.

Designing jobs

The Quanbiao event theme includes the use of lights, which brought the lanterns to P1,000 each, the University of Santo Tomas, which purchased 100,000 lanterns at P1,000 each, and a Filipino community in Dubai, which got hundreds of lanterns with lantern designs.

When he was given the Edulunan Award by former President Fidel Ramos in 1998, he received a design job through Philippine Village. BOOKED up on Christmas cards

CHRISTMAS cards

Just like people, when it comes to cards, what's important is what's inside

Have yourself a merry little Christmas card

By Pam Pines

CHRISTMAS would not be complete without a card or two (at once a tradition, if you're lucky).

And right now, thousands of Ciano's cards are being prepared all over the world to be sent out to friends for the holidays.

The history of Ciano's, one of the biggest names in stationery, goes way back to the 1800s. The company has actually been responsible for making paper for its currency since 1876.

Ciano's cards, which are 100 percent cotton, may cost more than your typical bank-note bought card, but apparently there is more to these stationery than meets the eye. They are considered collectibles, what with the date of printing at the back and the limited supply of each design. In fact, Ciano's cards are also held around for business collections.

Here in the Philippines, people can get Ciano's cards exclusively from Papete, a shop that specializes in elegant paper. Although Ciano's has stopped taking orders for Christmas cards in November, the shop is still taking orders for a month. The shop is still taking orders for a month. The shop is still taking orders for a month.

And not only that, Papete also carries other elegant paper brands from London, New York and Paris. Ciano's executive chair says, "There is something for every price point, something for everyone."

Papete has made Pines with a paper brand happy for the past 10 years. It found a home in Pines' home for the old years before moving to its new shop in Inauguration, Rockwell.

Interesting note

Papete's collection are an interesting mix. There are elegant and classy stuff but there are modern and edgy stuff as well. Aside from the holiday-themed items, Papete also

Eastern Samar, secret jewel

SAMBAO spent a night, fishing, at the surfing competition four years ago

By Eric N. Asio
 Contributor

AFTER BUNAG, Cebu and Iloilo, Eastern Samar could be the next big tourist destination in the Visayas. But the site is difficult. You don't find it in travel maps. The best hint is available about the place, and parties, used by the thrilling surfers here, talk about it in the Internet or social exchanges, or if promoting a career.

There are no travel agencies to arrange your visit in Eastern Samar. The place hotels and no government resources are present in the province. If you want a bed, you can either stay in a homestay or build a tent in the beach.

You can only choose to be shocked or inspired here. Bamar more to your soul and history is what the province offers.

Eastern Samar is one of the three provinces of Samar Island. It lies on the east Pacific Ocean and partly covers one of the 2000 co-reigns in the world known by the United Nations Fund as coastal protecting the Earth's biodiversity.

To get to Eastern Samar, you can take the Cebu-Panay or PNH flight to Tachikawa City. If you are starting off in Manila, it takes the fast craft to Ormoc City and, then by sea to Tachikawa City. If you are starting off in Cebu.

From Tachikawa, you can take the bus for an hour and a half to the Bamar Limestone road or take the single 100-mile road for a little more than three hours.

I suggest that you first take the latter. It's a more-or-less road, but less traveled than the latter. As a result, the road has traveled hard to bring a lot of surprises. But don't worry, in Eastern Samar, they are positive surprises.

The province got very bad publicity in the past, but it's now relatively peaceful and open to foreign tourist activity.

Still, be warned. The sites in the province are not for the faint of heart or the physically weak. They are only for strong, tough, unshakable adventure seekers and lovers of the great outdoors.

Tropical rainforests

After two hours and a half of travel from Tachikawa City via the 100-mile road, you'll come to a portion of what remains of the forest here. For 100 years you'll be treated to natural sights of dense forests, quartzite mountains, rivers, rivers and streams, some hundreds of feet below sea level, some rarely seen in Cebu and Manila, and (I would suggest you), sights of the conditions of those who live off the resources of the forest of Bamar.

According to the Samar Island Biodiversity Project, this place is part of what is considered one of the 20 Centers of Plant Biodiversity in the country. A total of 3,400 species of flowering plants, including both species endemic to the Philippines and 40 species endemic only to Bamar, are found here and in other parts of the island.

These forests also form part of one of the sites known as the 100 Centers of Plant Biodiversity in the Philippines. A total of 1,000 species of plants are recorded here and in other parts of the island, 50 of them endemic. Among these plants are orchids and legumes. Thirty-one species of mammals, 25 species and 12 amphibians are also found in the area.

Traveling back, you will pass by a portion of the forest labeled Philippine Eagle sanctuary. Philippine Eagles are sometimes seen here along with Philippine Cockatoos, Flying Foxes and Terns, but signs of them are disappearing here.

Like many tropical rainforests in the world, the resource is also being threatened by degradation and the destruction of the diversity loss. Inevitably, however, protection, respect and respect, respect, and respect of harvesting of non-timber forest products, hunting and collection of wild life, management of resources, and the protection of biodiversity and nature are the criteria behind this, says SDO.

But the people of Eastern Samar, along with other Samaritans, are not giving up their habitat without putting up a fight. For years now, they have been pushing for the enactment of a law that will make the forests of Bamar a national park and shield them from further encroachments and destruction.

After experiencing the Bamar rainforest by the roadside, you will now pass by the small town of Tachikawa and Tachikawa. Tachikawa is the capital of Samar.

Hidden materials

In Bamar, you can find it in every Bamarian Province in the three provinces: Bamar and Tachikawa, both of which have been private buying. They also offer alternative means, but you can opt to visit at nearby restaurants and make it less private change and simple food. It is better that you turn to Bamar and prepare yourself for the change.

The following day, you should try to discover the materials in the municipality which are likely to influence them in many ways.

Pangul Falls is located in Bamar. It can be reached by taking a ride from the town proper and walking upstream for two to three hours along the river. Pangul Falls is about 100 ft high and runs into a pool that can accommodate 100-200 persons at the same time. You can spend
